Male Psychology Infographics

Infographics are visual representations of information, data, or knowledge. They are useful in that they convey information quickly and clearly, but it's important to remember that they offer only a snapshot about an issue, and that behind every infographic are the complex real lives of people, and in some cases the real hurt of their experiences

Usage, Permissions & References

Usages

The infographics on the CMP website are intended for the following purposes:

- to highlight statistics we think are interesting in relation to male psychology
- to highlight topics for discussion and further research
- to be used in teaching, research, or writing, but not as the sole source of information.

In other words, the primary source (or sources) upon which the infographic is based should be accessed and read. Infographics are a good starting point, but there should be some effort to understand the complexity of the context in which the infographic belongs.

Permissions

These infographics were designed by, and the copyright is owned by, The Centre for Male Psychology. Permission is granted for use of these infographics for any non-commercial activity as long as a link to The Centre for Male Psychology is clearly referenced (e.g., the CMP URL of the infographic is shown beside the infographic).

References

The following provides a list of references and / or links to where the source information for the infographics can be found. We are unable to offer any support with regards to accessing specific references, which might for example be accessible only via an academic institution, or behind a 'paywall'.
